rould not be detrimentally affected by a examination such as he made yesteray, but a cross-examination by council would undoubtedly be injurious. His lease appeared to be a progressive ne, and was not the result of a sudden tisck of barslysis.

The Committee thought it would be as rell not to examine Martin.

Called for Capt. Delaney. t. Goff then called two or three tim Capt. Delaney, who at last made to the from through the crowd from the corridor.

Mr. Goff, before putting him on the stand, called attention to the fact that Thomas Bradley, an ex-roundsman of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, who had been retired on a pension, was now Chief of Police of Norwalk, Conn. He simply offered this as showing some of the workings of the Police Pension Fund system.

Intermann Again on the Rack.

The first witness to take the stand was Policeman Intermann, who testified pesterdsy. Mr. Goff said he had received a tetter from the agent of the American line in regard to him, and saked him if he wished to change the testimony he had given yesterday.

"Yes, sir," said Intermann, "I want to say now that I used to divide up the money I got with the ward man." When you said you never gave up any of it, you swear to an untruth? A. I did. a. Way did you do that? A. I wanted to save friends. Mr. Vall and Sergt. Taylor. I did deby yesterday that I got the money from the ambity companies.

"That is all I want from you," said Mr. Goff, but the witness said he wanted to make a statement, so he was allowed to do so, Mr. Goff desiring it to be noted that he did flot ask him any questions, and that the testimony was entirely voluntary.

"I only want to say," said Intermann. "that at first I used to give up half of what I got, and afterwards $25 out of the $40, to the ward man."

Admits He Is a Perjurer. In answer to Senator O'Connor's question, the witness admitted that he had nerjured himself yesterday, because the police understood that they must stand by their superiors and each other, through thick and thin.

John Marrett, who was formerly agent of the Society for the Prevention of Ceirne while Gardner was Superintendent of the Society, was next called as a witness, and questioned by Mr. Moss.

Mores.

He testified that in the Gardner case a witness named Thomas Ryan had made a certain statement to him and Mr. Jerome, which he afterwards directly contradicted on the trial of Gardner. In ouner words, Ryan turned traitor. Previous to the trial Marrett said he went to the house of Supt. Hyrnes in company with Pyan.

"I went to the house with a letter Ryan had given me for Mrs. Byrnes. A young worms opened the door and not my name apstairs. She didn't come back, but a man came down named trank."

"Was this Frank Mangin?"
"I don't know, but while I was talkng to him, Supt. Byrnes came and valked into the parior where I was itting. He said something to Frank, and then asked me what I wanted. Shaken by Byrnes.

I gave him the letter from Ryan to Byrnes, and when he read it he it vief mad or pretended to, and abbed me by the collar and hustled ma about the room.

"Then he called Frank and told him to call two policemen to arrest me, as I was guisty of a felony in coming to the house and sceing Mrs. Byrnes. He said he would send me up for ten years. "Then he asked me what I knew about the Gardne case, and I told him all about how Capt. Devery and Detective Crowley went to my house with Lillie Clifton after Gardner's arrest and compelled me to let them search Gardner's grom.

had been picked up and threatened and compelled to tell the District-Attorney all he knew about the Gardner case.

Mr. Moss called attention to the methods of intimidation employed by the Polics Department, as shown by Marrett's testimony. It was the first time, he said, that the facts in regard to the Gardner case had been made public. No Use to Compinin.

Senator O'Connor wanted to know why Marrett rad never made a complaint agains: Supt. Byrnes for way-laying him and impresoning him in such a way, but he said he thought it would be of he use.

After he had told his story of Gardner to Supt. Byrnes, the latter, the witness said, called "Franz," and rescinded the order about procuring the two policemen and let Marrett go.

"Is capt. Allaire here?" asked My. Goff after Marrett had been excused. He was tol in the court-room her, but Bergt, Patrick Byrne, who represented him said he would go and bring him in.

Mr. Goff instead put the sergeant in the witness stand. Mr. Goff said it was difficult to get all the officers he and subponned to attend, because many of them were at the Court of Free and Terminer this morning. Mr. Goff, referring to the testimony them yesterday by members of the sisamioust squad to the effect that they said half the money they received to the laptain, asked the witness if he knew my thing about it.

"Nothing whatever," said Byrnes, "I were saw any money collected or paid over, but I heard rumors that money was being collected from the men."

He did not have the air of a man who is under a grave accusation, but smiled and charted gayly with a number of the captains and ex-captains who were on hand awaiting their turn to face Chief Inquisitor Goff.

Capt. Aliaire, who had reached the committee room just as the adjournment was announced, was also present. He looked anything but cheerful. He at least seemed in realize the gravity of the situation, and his face wore a most unhappy expression.

Mr Moss had a talk with the ex-Inspector, who had refused to say anything to the reporters. When Mr. Moss was asked if Steers would go upon the witness stand this afternoon he replied that he did not know. There is no work, so far as I know, that rivale it, or even approaches it, as a text-book of information touching the history of our city. At this time, when there is so deep and general an interest in manicipal matters, I wish there could be created a sentiment in behalf of the earnest reading and patient study of just such a work as Mrs. Lamb's long and wide research has given to the public. I think we could all of us render better service is our city if we were more familiar with its antocedents.
